Read-alikes

1. Watching Edie Like Share

Way, Camilla

Reason: Starring flawed, unstable protagonists, these riveting psychological thrillers explore the awful results of love and friendship twisted by envy, betrayal, and self-deception. Each intricately plotted novel is unnervingly suspenseful, imbued with a menacing atmosphere and a palpable sense of foreboding. -- Mike Nilsson

2. Losing you Like Share

French, Nicci

Reason: A beloved teenage daughter goes missing in Losing You, a stranger (of sorts) in The Girl on the Train. Despite this difference, these compelling psychological suspense novels, each set in England, offer a gripping, twisty story. -- Shauna Griffin

3. I let you go Like Share

Mackintosh, Clare

Reason: The female protagonists of these riveting thrillers are sympathetic but damaged, making them questionable narrators of their own involvement in tragic events: Rachel (Girl on the Train) witnesses a murder, while Jenna (Let You Go) confesses to killing a child. -- Kim Burton

4. Her every fear Like Share

Swanson, Peter, 1968-

Reason: Readers in search of Hitchcock-style suspense will be enthralled with these thrillers: both are modern spins on Rear Window's voyeurism that become all-consuming obsessions for the unreliable narrators, who insinuate themselves into murder investigations. -- Donna Maturri

5. The other woman's house Like Share

Hannah, Sophie, 1971-

Reason: In these absorbing psychological suspense stories, women who believe they've witnessed something shady are personally, dangerously drawn into the ensuing police investigations. Obsession -- and real action -- also play a role in both novels. -- Shauna Griffin
